Everett Public Library to host local history writers' panel Local authors will share tips to help other writers tell their stories

EVERETT, WA— Do you have a story that you're just dying to share? Have you ever considered publishing a book or writing articles about local history?

The Everett Public Library's Northwest Room will host an interactive discussion with ten published local authors to talk about their experiences getting their ideas to readers. The panel will take place on Tuesday, Nov. 12, at 5:30 p.m. in the Everett Public Library auditorium, located at 2702 Hoyt Ave.

This year's panelists are Steve Bertrand, Gene Fosheim, Deborah Fox, JD Howard, Aileen Langhans, Jack O'Donnell, Denise Ohio, Les Parks, Richard Porter and Margaret Riddle. Their collected works include graphic novels, zines, peer-reviewed articles, documentary films, textbooks, novels and more. Whether you're interested in writing memoir, documenting local history or exploring another genre, come prepared with your questions and learn how to reach readers with your writing.

Several of the panelists will have copies of their work for sale following the discussion. This event is free and open to the public. No advance registration is required.
